

Australian Rescue Beagle boasts Overseas Career

The story of Pippa

Early last year Beagle Rescue Victoria received a phone call requesting help and assistance to re-home an unruly female Beagle named Pippa.

They went to Pippa's home to temperament test her in her environment and it was abundantly clear to both Jen and Tam that she was not suitable for re-homing in a pet home. She was clearly distressed both physically and mentally, snapped out at opened hands, snarled and showed much negative and fearful behaviour.

A gentleman by the name of John Elder had contacted the rescue group the week before and explained that he and his family ran Elder Pest Control and had devised a training program where Beagles would sniff out termites. They work on the same positive reward system that all Beagles work on: FOOD.

Luckily for Pippa she was exactly what John was looking for in a Beagle.

Pippa is now living in Singapore where she spends her life working, eating, being photographed and spending her time happily doing what she was bred to do. She has gone from being a highly distressed, overweight and unhappy girl (as pictured below) to the now settled, beaming, international superstar who even has her own résumé and webpage on line!

John, Nola and their son Chris (CEO of Elder) have been an amazing support for Beagle Rescue and they know that each lucky Beagle sent their way will receive the highest level of care and training. Elder Pest Control has not only pledged to make monthly donations to Beagle Rescue Victoria but have just taken another wonderful girl (Genevieve) under their wings to train.

Pippa was overweight and unhappy, but now she is happy, healthy and has a real purpose in life

See the next page for a newspaper article written on Pippa and links to online articles

Termites' worst enemy

Meet Pippa, first dog in S'pore trained to sniff out the pests

SHERALYN TAY
sheralyn@mediacorp.com.sg

PIPPA sniffs at her work, but that doesn't bug her employers one bit. In fact, it's all in a day's work for the two-year-old Australian-born beagle – as South-east Asia's first Termite Detection Specialist.

The furry foreign talent is a new addition to local pest control company Origin Exterminators and her job is to nose around homes and smell out termites.

"She fits our corporate image," said Ms Mandy Mah, Origin's sales and marketing executive, referring to the company's policy of using eco-friendly and creative solutions for pest control.

Of course, it helps that Pippa is faster and twice as accurate in detecting termites, as compared to conventional means.

She takes just half an hour to check a 5-room housing board flat, compared to three to four hours using other means. When she detects termites, she'll indicate it by sitting and looking around expectantly for treats.

For every inspection Pippa is involved in, Origins will donate $10 to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. 'It'll be Pippa's own way of giving back to her kind,' said marketing executive Mandy Mah.

Said Pippa's trainer John Elder: "The accuracy level of dogs is far greater than that of humans or instruments (such as thermal imagers or microwave emitting devices) – with a 98-per-cent success rate, compared to just 45 per cent."

Mr Elder, who runs his own pest management firm in Yamba, New South Wales, also developed a training system for dogs to identify termites and bedbugs. His school is the only one in Australia to breed and train termite specialists like Pippa.

So far, he has got eight fully-trained dogs and about 11 in training. Mr Elder said it takes an average of six months to train a dog for fieldwork and each canine is valued at more than A$20,000 ($25,700).

But he doesn't "sell" his dogs to just anyone, he stressed, only to companies with a proven track record. Indeed, it took three months of negotiation before he agreed to let Pippa work in Singapore.

And since her arrival on Saturday, Pippa has been busy acclimatising and meeting her (human) workmates – having already bonded with her new "personal assistant" and handler Caleb Loh Zhi Wei. The 23-year-old was a narcotics detection dog handler during his stint in National Service.

Said Caleb: "She is very obedient and has a good search drive. I am confident we have the ideal chemistry to become a good team."

According to Origin, Pippa will be used in all termite inspections, with priority given to existing clients. It will cost $200 to $380 per inspection, depending on the type of house.

And for every inspection Pippa is involved in, the company will donate $10 to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

"It'll be Pippa's own way of giving back to her kind," said Ms Mah.

TREVOR TAN

Other articles on Pippa include :

Pippa's online ORIGIN profile

(with link to Pippa's CV)

Termite's Worst Enemy

Dog Trained in Australia becomes Termite Detection Specialist

Termite-detecting canine nothing to sniff at